A normal, healthy sex life is the ideal that men all over the world want to achieve. Regardless of culture, economic background, or profession, men want to be able to sustain loving and harmonious romantic relationships with their spouses or partners, and being able to perform normal sexual functions is vital to this ideal. These days, everywhere you look in mass media, there is a fascination with virility and sexual performance being marketed to men of all ages, and this is also used to sell everything from hair care products, clothes, hygiene products, razors, gym equipment, colognes, beer, and so many other products and services. The implication is that men are complete when they are able to hone their sexual prowess and get the woman of their dreams using the products that they purchase. But what if there is a problem with the main component of male sexual performance itself? In sexual intercourse, the man utilizes his penis for the act itself, with procreation and/or pleasure in mind. However, a condition known as erectile dysfunction afflicts millions of men all over the world, rendering them powerless and unable to fulfill this aspect of the sexual act.
