Pioneer...activist...legend: The 1970s were a time of free love and experimentation. Few cared if you were gay, straight, bisexual or transgender. It was the era of sex, drugs & rock n roll. In the midst of all this appeared a woman who had turned the head of Al Capone, married into the famous Maybelline company, and possessed such beauty, magnetism and allure that made men do most anything. When Evelyn F. Williams and her enigmatic young male companion arrived in Hot Springs, Arkansas, they took over the famous town in a whirlwind of lights, rock n roll, cameras, beautiful people and a grand lifestyle. They created a media frenzy wherever they went until jealousy and resentment led to stories of orgies, twisted sex, drugs, Mafia hits...and the mystery of the Maybelline Queen's fiery death, which some still call an unsolved murder. This is the uncut version of that high-living time written by the young man who lived it with Evelyn the man who was supposed to never be heard from again Danne Montague King, a.k.a., The Maybelline Prince who went on to found a skincare dynasty of his own. Hobnobbing with decadent bluebloods, politicians, movie stars and social activists, Danne amassed a large and loyal following the world over.
